

April 14, 2006

David Major is definitely one in a million. His passion for speaking and his caring personae make him the best speaker that I have ever heard. There are a lot of people out there who can speak, and call themselves motivational speakers. But to me what defines a real motivational speaker- is someone who takes time out of their own lives, after their speeches to talk to those who have been touched by their words. And this is exactly what David does with his students.

After listening to David, I felt as if someone out there understood me as an adolescent going through life. His words about perseverance, passion and determination showed me that anything is possible, but only if you allow it to be. A wide array of emotions overcame me after his speech and when I spoke to him about it, not only did he talk to me about his own experiences, he took about 1 hour of his time and just talked to me about life. That is dedication.

That is motivation and that is pure leadership at its peak. He didn't need to sit and talk to me, but chose to, and unlike other speakers who come in, do their job, talk to only people they need to, and leave, David makes himself an equal to the students he speaks with. Because of this, whenever I am asked who my favorite is, I always say David. There is no one else who is as real as him.

His actions exemplify purity and sincerity. He honestly believes in what he says, and this is why he touches students through his words. A good speaker is someone who not only shows they care, but honestly does care. And therefore, in my eyes, David Major will always be my #1 motivational speaker because he does just that- he really cares.

I don't admire him because he can talk well, but I admire him because he puts his passion into words and inspires others to do the same. I also commend the fact that he is honestly a good person at heart which makes him a better speaker. I thank David for inspiring me with his words. He makes motivational speaking more than just a business, but because he believes it, he makes it his life. And for that, thank you will never be enough.

Sweet Smiles and Luv Always,
Saswati Deb- Eastern Ontario Leadership Seminars 2002-2006